

HURLEY US OPEN FINAL FORECAST, SATURDAY EVENING 7/25/2009

BRIEF OVERVIEW/MEDIA QUOTE: Our solid SSW groundswell will slowly ease over Sunday, but still providing plenty of waves for the finals!

SUNDAY 26th

SWELL/SURF: SSW groundswell fading but still fairly solid with surf running in the head high to a couple feet overhead range on the bigger sets. It looks like we'll see a minor/small NW swell mix in as well. Still generally walled and with a south to north drift, although shape will improve a little with the swell combo (still mostly walled out on the bigger sets though). The drift will also be a little less extreme.

WIND/CONDITIONS: Light/variable to very light South/SW winds early. Moderate West flow builds for the afternoon. Look for beautiful clear sunny skies and warm weather.
